THREE OPTIONS FOR REPORTING SPECIAL EDUCATION TEACHERS

- Teachers providing support services
- Teachers providing content instruction to students with disabilities
- Teachers working as co-teachers

TEACHERS PROVIDING SUPPORT SERVICES

- These teachers provide support services in any setting (resource room, general education classroom, etc)
- These teachers support and enhance the instruction taught in the general education classroom
- Teacher is required to have the appropriate special education endorsement

TEACHERS PROVIDING CONTENT INSTRUCTION TO STUDENTS WITH DISABILITIES

- Teachers teach specific content to students with an IEP.
- Students do not attend the general education classroom
- The teacher is required to have both the appropriate special education endorsement and the appropriate content endorsement

CO-TEACHING ASSIGNMENT

- General Education teacher and Special Education teacher are equally responsible for the students' success and the course outcomes. (Equally responsible is determined by the district)
- Requires one teacher to have the appropriate special education endorsement and the other teacher to have the appropriate content endorsement.

5 Questions for Parents and Educators

1. How is the term specific learning disability different from a term like dyslexia?
2. Can a school identify a specific learning disability and the use terms like dyslexia, dyscalculia, and dysgraphia in its evaluation?
3. Can terms like dyslexia, dyscalculia, and dysgraphia be useful in a child's evaluation and IEP?
4. Are there legal reasons for a school to avoid terms like dyslexia, dysgraphia, or dyscalculia?
5. How can using specific terms like dyslexia, dyscalculia, and dysgraphia impact the interventions selected for a child?
