CORRECTED NEWS RELEASE:

Seven districts were removed from the list of 32 districts not making AYP, which was presented to the State Board of Education on Wednesday, September 10. It was determined that the districts were incorrectly identified as not making AYP.

Two schools were also removed from the list of 139 schools. Prairie Elementary School, Haysville USD 261, and Appanoose Elementary School, West Franklin USD 287, are new schools which under federal guidelines automatically are granted AYP status their first year in existence.

The following release reflects the corrected information.

Ninety percent of Kansas Schools and 92% of Districts Make Adequate Yearly Progress (AYP)

For the 2007-08 testing cycle, 90% of the state’s public schools and 92% of districts made adequate yearly progress (AYP), even though the targets for mathematics and reading have been steadily increasing since 2002. This compares with 89% of public schools and districts making AYP last year and 84 % the previous year. Student achievement continues to rise in Kansas.

“The good news is that more Kansas schools are achieving their goals in reading and mathematics. This is true even though these same goals have increased substantially over last year. By a persistent focus on academic standards, Kansas educators are clearly meeting the challenge of educating all students to high levels,” according to Kansas Commissioner of Education, Dr. Alexa Posny.

The list of public schools and districts not making AYP was presented to the Kansas State Board of Education as required by federal legislation. Of the 1365 public schools in Kansas, 1228 made adequate yearly progress for 2007-08. Of the 296 districts in Kansas, 271 made AYP for the 2007-08 testing cycle.
